Coraline

by Neil Gaiman

An electrifyingly creepy tale likely to haunt young readers for many moons. After Coraline and her parents move into an old house, Coraline asks her mother about a mysterious locked door. Her mother unlocks it to reveal that it leads nowhere: "When they turned the house into flats, they simply bricked it up," her mother explains. But something about the door attracts the girl, and when she later unlocks it herself, the bricks have disappeared. Through the door, she travels a dark corridor (which smells "like something very old and very slow") into a world that eerily mimics her own.

Down the Rabbit Hole: an Echo Falls Mystery

by Peter Abrahams

Ingrid is in the wrong place at the wrong time. Or at least her shoes are. Getting them back means getting involved in a murder investigation rivaling those solved by her idol, Sherlock Holmes, and Ingrid has enough on her plate with club soccer, school, and the plum role of Alice in the Echo Falls production of Alice in Wonderland. But much as in Alice's adventures down the rabbit hole, things in Ingrid's small town keep getting curiously and curiously.

The Looking-Glass Wars

by Frank Beddor

In this first installment of a planned trilogy, 7-year-old Alyss Hart is pitted against her evil Aunt Redd in the succession to the throne of Wonderland. Escaping through the Pool of Tears, Alyss encounters Charles Dodgson (Carroll) and entrusts her story to him. While Dodgson proceeds to publish his own version of Alyss' story, royal bodyguard Hatter Madigan finds Alyss and returns her to Wonderland to face Aunt Redd in a battle for the throne.

Through the Looking-Glass and What Alice Found There

by Lewis Carroll

In this sequel to Alice's Adventures in Wonderland, Alice climbs through the mirror in her room, and enters a world similar to a chess board where she experiences many curious adventures with its fantastic inhabitants.
